Boro-Man 'Czarevich,' Says CIA Ex-Aide

A former Central Intelligence Agency official challenged the agency today to disclose evidence that a defector Polish spy, now living in Kew Gardens is actually the son of the last Russian czar.

Herman Kimsey, former chief of analysis and research for the CIA and lately assistant chief of security for the Republican National Committee, said the CIA has made exhaustive tests to establish the true identity of the mysterious Pole, Col. Michael Goleniewski. He said he was convinced the tests proved Goleniewski is Grand Duke Alexei, only son of Czar Nicholas II.

GOLENIEWSKI said he plans to press his claims in American courts and may attempt to force CIA sources to surrender information in their possesion if it is not made public voluntarily by the government agency.

Czarevich Alexei was reported by a White Russian commission to have died with his father, mother and four sisters in a July 18, 1918 massacre by the Bolsheviks. The report was issued on the basis of fragmentary bones found in a pit in Ekaterinburg, Russia, a few weeks after the royal family's murder. But rumors have persisted that the entire imperial family survived and there has been no definitive proof to the contrary.

Kimsey broke the veil of official secrecy concerning the background of Goleniewski, a high Polish secret service officer who defected to the West in 1960, only 10 days after the defector declared himself the true czarevich and heir to a $400 million fortune deposited by the czar in Western banks more than 50 years ago.

"ON THE BASIS of what I know of the CIA investigation of Goleniewski's identity, I believe he is the Czarevich Alexei," Kimsey said. "I do not know why the CIA has withheld the necessary proof of identity from a person who has done so much for this country and who only wishes to live under his own name and claim what is rightfully his."
